what's in the box

a small box, actually opened sangria + spritz

a bottle of our sangria and a 4-pack of our spritzers, sweetened only with fruit and honey a collectible sticker

a new design every drop a playlist

artists under 1M monthly listeners your product

one haircare or skincare product and one makeup product each month gen z + millennial women all 21+ and age-verified at checkout ingredient readers

they chose a four-ingredient spritz sweetened only with honey high disposable income

they pay for quality and try what lands on their doorstep why it's worth it for you seeding you can actually measure the only brand in your category two partners a month, never two in the same category. no gift bag of ten samples.

a code for every member see exactly who shops, and we share the results back with you.

content you didn't pay for we boost the unboxing posts, so you get real customers using your product.

your customer, already here women who read labels and spend on quality, and who signed up to discover new brands.

the math

~$295 of product at cost puts your full-size product in the hands of 30 age-verified women for a month.

~$10

per customer who's actually used your product.

ads can't buy that. they can only buy a look.

the same $295, two ways

year-one roi	meta ads	spritz club low case	~0.9× at $148 a customer	~1.3× if 1 in 10 buy mid case	~2.1× at $61 a customer	~2.6× if 1 in 5 buy high case	~3.4× at $38 a customer	~4.3× if 1 in 3 buy spritz club beats meta's median once 1 in 6 members buy. the downside is capped at $295 of product, and every buyer has already used it for a month.

illustrative: $30 product at ~30% cost, 30 units + ~$25 shipping. roi = year-one gross profit (~$185 revenue per customer at ~69% margin) ÷ $295. meta range: beauty DTC CAC benchmarks (EightX, 2026). low case: birchbox, 11.2% of sampled subscribers bought full size.
